TOMBSTONE OF THE FUTURE

Quoted in part from a 1998 Forbes Magazine

"Personal computers have become so common that it sometimes appears that the only people who don't have them are dead. They do now. Deac Manross, founder of Lebanon, Ohio-based Leif Technologies, has built a very personal computer specifically for syberstiffs. He sells computerized grave markers that function as interactive burial sites. The tombstone includes a built-in computer with a 5 inch by 4 inch screen that can hold up to 85 pages of data, including photographs, poems and stories. An updated version of the ancient Egyptian practice of entombing a mummy with its favorite artifacts. Silly! Not at all. It's an example of how technology will enable future generations to get in touch with the past. No longer will a tombstone be limited to a name and a few dates. "
